

BALLET EVENING AT COVENT GARDEN

In a nod to James' fondness for all things pink and frilly, sixty of his friends from London got together for a night of ballet at the Royal Opera House in Covent Garden. The night comprised three short works, kicking off with the classical 'Les Sylphides', moving on to the more contemporary 'Sensorium' and finishing with the flamboyant 'The Firebird' (sadly no puffins involved). The night was a great chance for lots of people to catch up and for many it was their first trip to the magnificent ROH, (or the ballet for that matter!) with everyone making a donation towards the PMF in return for a place in the 'cheap seats' which saw us all tucked right up in the rafters with a puffin's eye view of the stage. For those with less classically trained eyes, the programme of three short works meant that the evening also involved three refreshment intervals of not unreasonable duration which allowed everyone to discuss the finer points of the ballerinas' techniques at length over a drink or three.
